EASTER HARE TALES

Ages 7+

Working under the creative collective moniker of 'The Heckleburn Quines', visual artist Mel Shand, ceramicist Hilary Duncan and basket maker Helen Jackson will lead an exciting mixed-media session inspired by their own 'Easter Hare Tale'.

Using artist Albrecht Durer's sitting hare and her own paintings of wild hares for inspiration, Mel will lead guests through simple mono-printing techniques to draw or trace a hare, and apply surface decoration with botanical shapes and feathers.

Using one of the hare drawings as a template, Hilary will then support participants to make a ceramic Easter hare plaque, decorated using traditional techniques such as sgraffito, sprigging and embossing.

Helen will share her basket making and willow weaving skills to demonstrate how to make woven leaf platters, using rush, willow, birch and larch, upon which Easter treasures can be laid.

EASTER HARE TALE

By the Heckleburn Quines

One morning in Springtime a long, long time ago, a hare was lolloping along a bare field when she came across a curious thing. In front of her on the ground were four small, smooth, oval eggs. "How strange", she thought, "these weren't here yesterday, who left me this present in my field?".

The sun was warm and as the hare was a little tired she decided to stop for a rest, and lay down right there on top of the eggs. Suddenly a lovely bird fluttered into view all agitated and twittery,

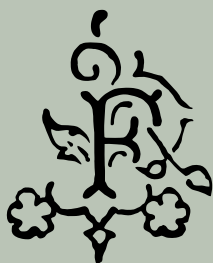

"Where are my eggs you naughty hare?

The hare barely opened one eye and said "Your eggs? You can't just leave precious things lying around, I assumed they were a gift for me. These are my eggs now - finders keepers!" and she went back to snoozing.

The bird flew up into a tree and thought to herself, "I need to find somewhere safer to leave my eggs so that meddlesome hare can't steal them anymore, and I must disguise them so they stay safe!"

So she gathered up some twigs and moss and built a lovely little nest hidden amongst the leaves of the tree and this time laid four beautiful speckled eggs inside.

The hare was so delighted with her present she stood up on her back legs and danced for joy.
